India : a secular democracy on the decline?

At home and abroad, one of postindependence India's defining characteristics is that the nation has managed to sustain democratic governance in the face of striking ethnic, linguistic, and religious diversity. In the early years after independence, the country's first prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, and the ruling Indian National Congress (or Congress Party) advocated for an Indian brand of secularism designed to hold the country's disparate communities together under one roof.

By this definition, I would submit that the India of today is not a secular country. I further assert that the policies of the Indian state are not just unsecular but smack of blatant religious reverse-discrimination against its majority community. Here is why I assert that the Indian state is NOT secular: 1) Different laws for Hindus, Muslims and Christians In a truly secular country, all citizens irrespective of religion would be covered by a single set of laws.
